

TINY WOODS TROUBLE

A short, sweet and simple adventure for Level 1 adventurers.

INTRODUCTION

“Is it even safe to go out in the woods anymore?”

Pokémon Square hasn't been so peaceful lately. Normally an idyllic village flanked by shallow forests and chalky cliffs, a rash of freak natural disasters has everyone's fur on end. Familiar places are warped into winding labyrinths, the inhabitants driven wild by a frenzied crackle of mystery like the air before a storm.

Tiny Woods Trouble is based on the beginning of Red and Blue Rescue Team. Players should pick first-stage pokémon at roughly the same power level as regional starters (45-55 base stat total), and begin at level 1. The party will be tasked with rescuing a child from a dungeon uncovered by an earthquake.

Once players have filled in their sheets and introduced their characters – including at least one trait that would make them willing to help a pokémon in need – the Guild Master can begin narrating.

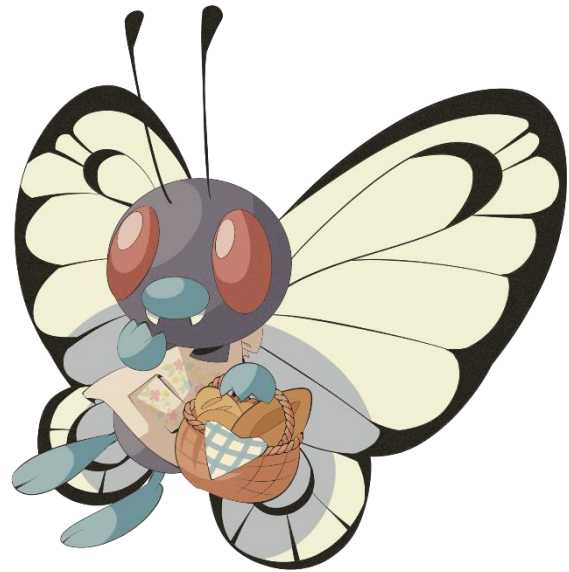

STARTING THE ADVENTURE

The Guild Master may summarise or read aloud the following:

A warm evening glow is settling over the trees around Pokémon Square. Some of you are here together, some of you are alone, out where the town meets the trees, enjoying the fresh air when the silence is broken by a shout, and you see a butterfree racing towards you in a panic:

“My baby, my baby! Please, you have to help me!”

She's nearly inconsolable, and it's hard to make out what she's trying to say. What do you do?

Butterfree | She/Her

“Do be careful, please! It's terribly dangerous in there!”

Concerned mother of caterpie. Sweet, caring, and deeply grateful. Emotionally intelligent but physically weak. Works as a seamstress in town.

Appearance: Gentle, weathered. Delicate with soft features.

Players can reason with Butterfree to calm her down, pick up on what she's trying to convey, or follow her tracks back to the entrance of Tiny woods.

Butterfree's situation is as follows: While she and her son Caterpie were foraging, a chasm opened, and he fell in. He's far too weak to crawl out by himself, and when she went to get him, the pokémon inside attacked her.

If asked about a reward, Butterfree will offer 100 poké per party member. This can be bargained up to 200 poké per member, but not further. She will also offer items and food in exchange for the group's help.

At the entrance to the forest, there are signs of activity nearby, with the flowers visibly plucked, bites taken out of the leaves, and pokémon tracks leading into the forest. Despite the tension in the air, the woods are eerily quiet, with every twig snap on and leaf rustle seeming to echo for miles. After a few minutes of walking, they come across this:

An enormous chasm has split the clearing ahead of you, yawning like the jaws of a monster. Above the stifling silence you can finally hear something: the growls of agitated pokémon, frenzied by the sudden opening of the fissure. Shelves of rock and dirt form steps down into the winding crevasse, between the tangled roots of trees.

The Guild Master should address the party member with the highest Survival skill, or Specialist Knowledge in Mystery Dungeons. Failing that, any party member with the Explorer or Adventurer background. Read or summarise:

You've heard of natural disasters uncovering the entrances into Mystery Dungeons – dangerous winding labyrinths where the native pokémon are driven into a frenzy by the energy in the air. Although this one doesn't look as treacherous as some you've heard of, it's no place for a kid like Caterpie. You need to find that boy, and quickly.

Before entering, they can also make Survival, Perception, or Specialist Knowledge (Dungeons/Mysteriosity) checks to discover the following things about the dungeons (one piece of information per successful check):

- The dungeon is four floors deep.
- Caterpie is located on the final floor.
- Floors will be small, consisting of up to four rooms connected by narrow corridors.
- The pokémon inside will be a mix of grass, bug, and normal types.
- Due to its recent opening, there likely will not be other explorers or any salesmon inside.
- Due to the proximity to town and low area of mystery, there likely will not be any rare treasures or large deposits of poké.
- The terrain is a mixture of grassy and rocky, with ample foliage and overgrowth.
- There is likely to be drinkable water and edible forage, as well as common seeds and berries.

On a failed roll, or if all learnable knowledge points are exhausted, the players will learn a random piece of knowledge from the Useless Information Table (see end of document).

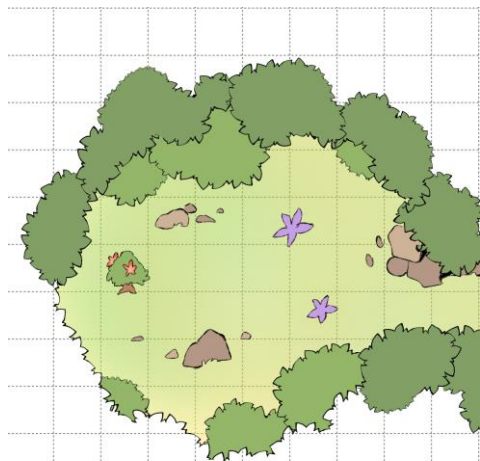

With that, the players can enter Tiny Woods.

FLOOR 1: VINE AND DANDY

Players start in Room 1, pictured. The tan cliff walls of the dungeon are cloaked in greenery that dapples the light. There is a corridor to the east leading to another chamber.

In the room is a shrub flowering with red-pink buds; a Perception, Survival or Specialist Knowledge (Botany, Plants) check tells that it's a juvenile cheri berry plant. Normally they grow in small groves of three or four. Why is this one alone?

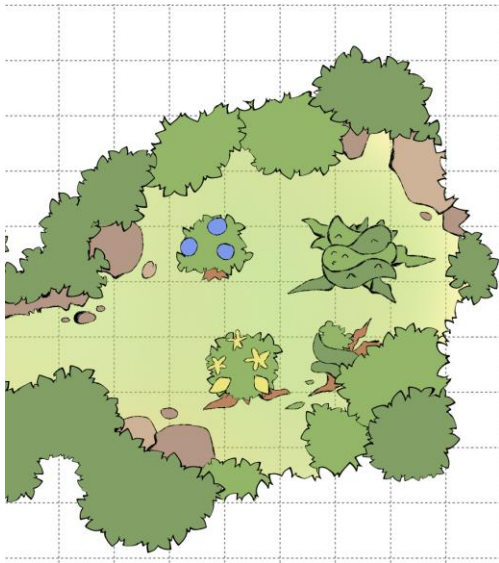

Strange purple flowers with dagger-shaped petals bloom on the floor. They're unlike anything the party's seen – a sign that the mystery of the dungeon is affecting the local flora. They're non-poisonous, but bitter and tingly when eaten.

If party members want to search for items or forage, consult the Treasure and Forage index. A successful check gets them a d20 roll on the appropriate table.

As the party enters, the Guild Master should mention how the area's ambient mystery puts them on edge – teeth itching, fur on end, muscles feeling tense, nausea, a general sense of unease, etc.

In the next chamber is a tangle of plant life. A cursory examination shows that the stairs to the next floor are hidden beneath a choke of thorny vines. If touched, they deal 1 point of damage, or 2 points to a red pokemon.

The vines regrow if damaged. They must take 15 points of damage or more in a single blow to be destroyed. They are weak to fire, flying and bug-type moves.

In the room also is an oran berry bush with three berries, a sleep seed bush with two seeds and three golden flowers, and a bush that's been choked and overwhelmed by vines.

Identifying the plant by its leaves, roots or seeds shows that it's a cheri berry bush. The vines will also reach out to eat anything red. If the players realise that the vines have a fondness for red things, they can lure the bulk of them away and destroy their delicate roots, which only have 5 HP and do not regrow.

Exposing the roots can also be done by digging beneath the plant, or launching multiple simultaneous attacks. Guild Masters can hint to this by mentioning that it's suspicious that one plant has been utterly choked by vines while the others are untouched, having vines reach for red party members or red accessories, or mentioning how the dry, shallow roots are briefly visible after an attack before the vines regrow.

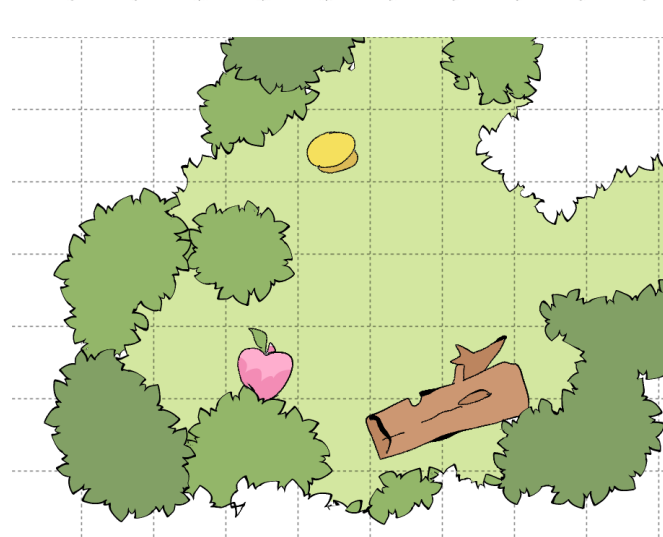

Beneath the vines is a stone staircase down to the next floor of the dungeon. Sensations of unease grow stronger, and the party can hear the sound of things moving about below, like a combee hive buzzing before an attack order is sent. The staircase down is uneven, cracked and mossy, the stone and the plants battling fiercely over the space.

After a brief descent, the darkness of the stairway gives way to the blinding light of the second floor, where further trials await the party.

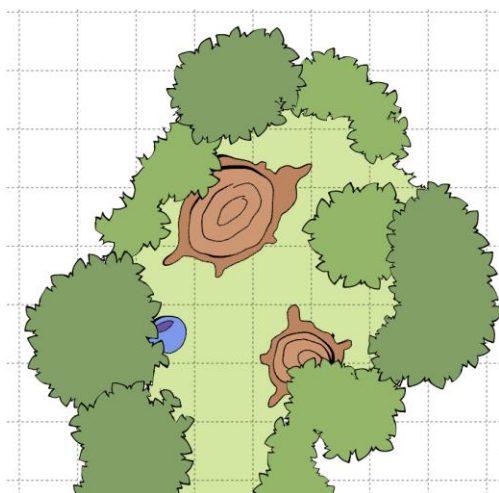

GUILD MASTER TIP

When describing an area, go into as much detail as you feel comfortable with, and don't neglect senses other than sight: the sounds or lack thereof, odd scents, a taste in the air or the feeling of the terrain can bring the dungeon to life.

You can also imply a sixth sense for areas of intrigue – a tension in the atmosphere that the characters can't quite identify the source of, but makes their skin crawl just the same. Keep a short list of sensory descriptors on hand to paint the scene and lead the players towards points of interest..

A pecha berry, 41p and 4 sharp sticks can be found on the ground. An additional 22p is hidden inside the fallen log. Again, the party can forage and search for items on the Treasure and Forage table, but only once per room, remember!

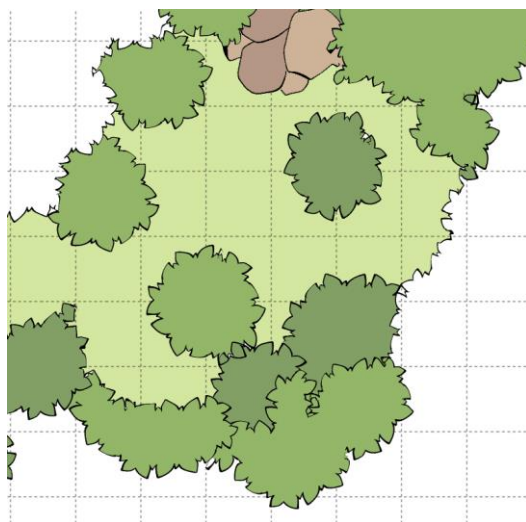

The room to the north contains several low shrubs and a pair of stumps. An oran berry lays on the ground. Players can find one additional oran berry in a nearby bush.

On the larger of the two stumps, a riddle is written in runes around the base that reads 'I live when I eat but I die when I drink'. The answer is fire, and if a fire is started on the stump, it will ignite a magical flame. The flame will teach the move Mystical Fire to any pokémon who can learn it by level-up, TM, tutor or breeding, but only once per day.

On the smaller stump, it appears that a list of basic wares is carved (see Treasure and Forage). If money is left on the stump and the party leaves the room, a shy tarountula salesmon will place their chosen wares on the stump and ring a small bell before retreating into the trees. He is polite if confronted but dislikes being seen by his customers. Each item can only be purchased once before he runs out of stock and closes for the day.

In the south-eastern room, players will be attacked by enemy pokémon that leap out from nearby trees. Use the number of party members +1, and start them at level 1 – see the Enemy Stats index for quick stat blocks.

Depending on player confidence, have the enemies use different tactics against them: basic foes will focus on attacking, but more strategically intelligent opponents will attempt to create cover, assist allies, use items or hinder foes.

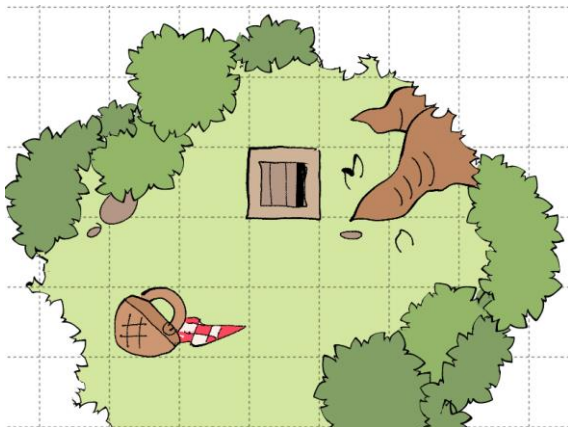

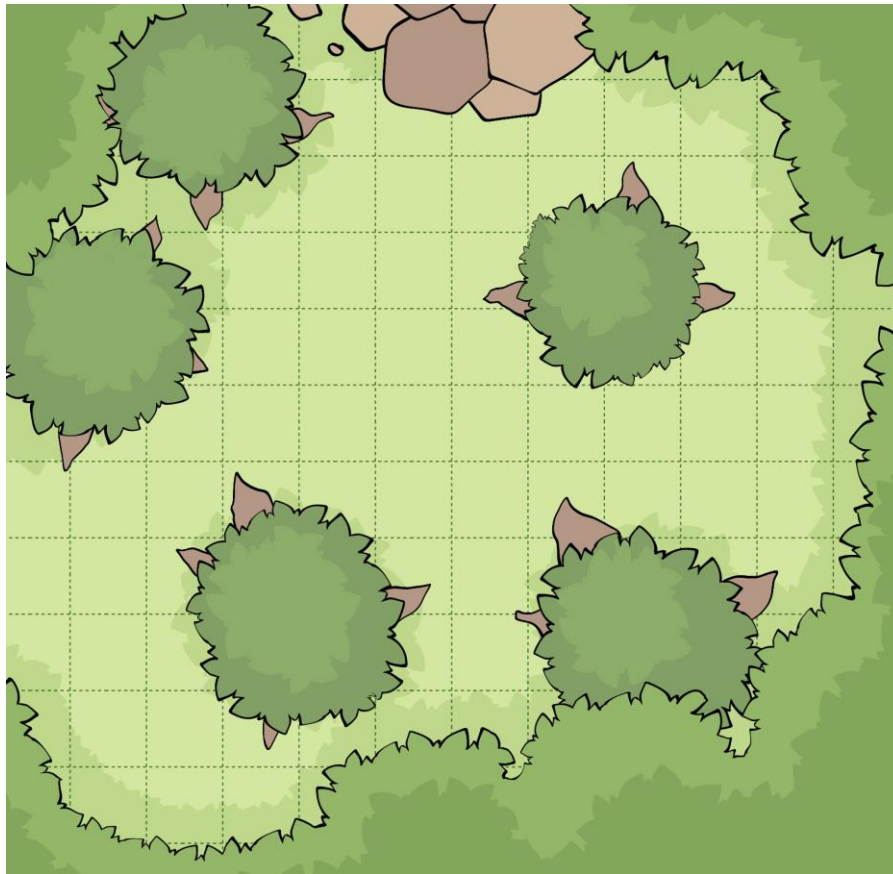

Make sure the players know that combat ends not only when one side can no longer fight, but when one side is no longer willing to fight. If a party member lands a critical hit or a vicious super-effective attack, consider having an enemy attempt to flee in fear.

The area is grassy, with no escalating environmental factors that would put a time limit on the battle. Trees provide partial cover. Additionally, mark two squares for pitfall traps. If a character steps on a square that contains a pit, they must use their next turn to get out of the pit.

The upper part of the room is blocked by a rockslide. Players can use brute force to clear it or their agility to climb over (or even under) it.

On the next page, you'll find a battle map to use for this room.

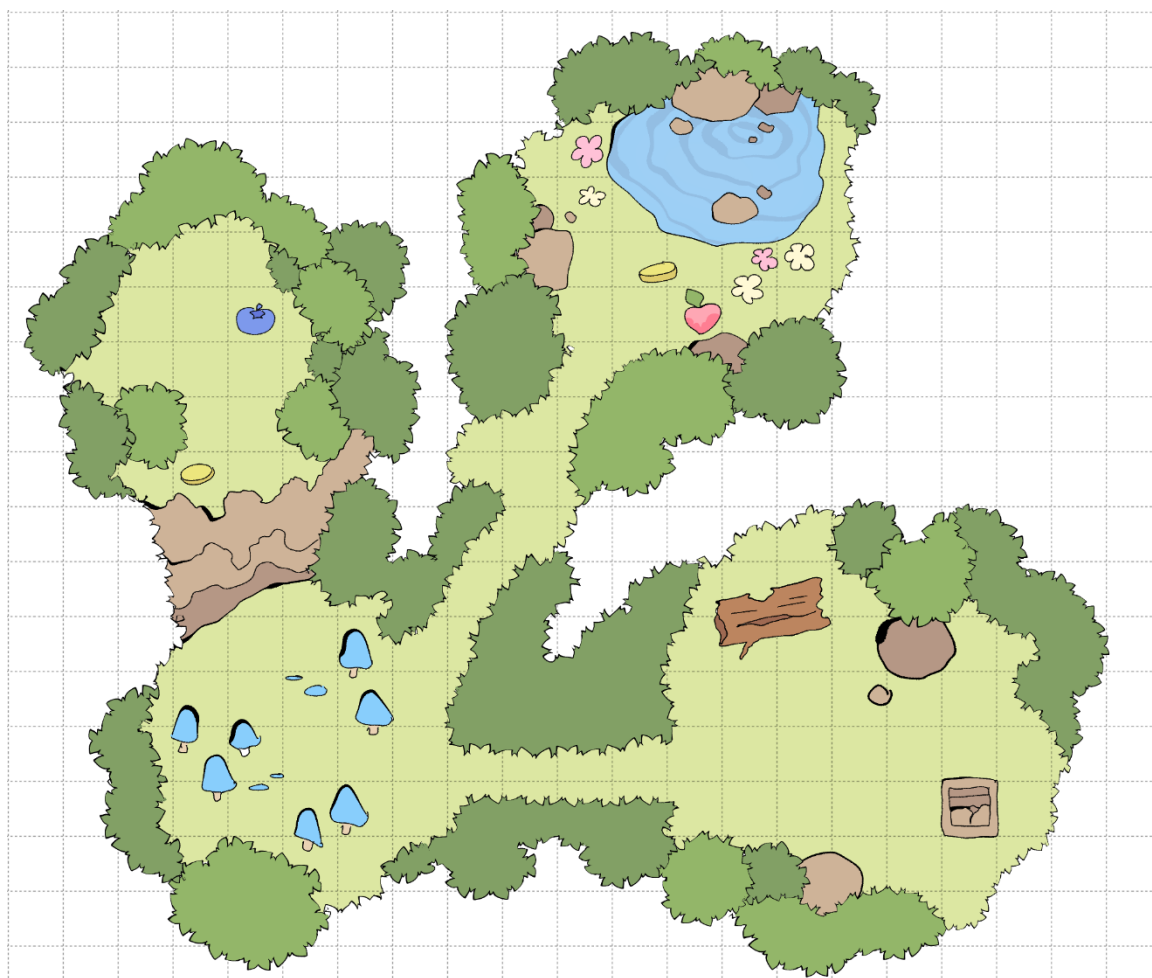

In the northern room, players find the stairs as well as an abandoned picnic basket. It is mostly empty, and pokémon tracks nearby suggest that scavengers have consumed the berries and fruits inside. The picnic blanket is embroidered with Caterpie's name.

Down the stairs, players can hear cacophonous shouting. After descending halfway, it suddenly and eerily stops, leaving them in silence.

A short examination of the room reveals residue of a String Shot clinging to the lower branches of a tree, and deep scratches (from both claws and beaks) chipping the bark of the surrounding trees. Players should deduce that Caterpie passed through here and acted defensively while being pursued. If comfortable with it, emphasise the fact that Caterpie is in danger of being attacked, and that the party must hurry on.

FLOOR 3: PERRENIAL PERPLEXITIES

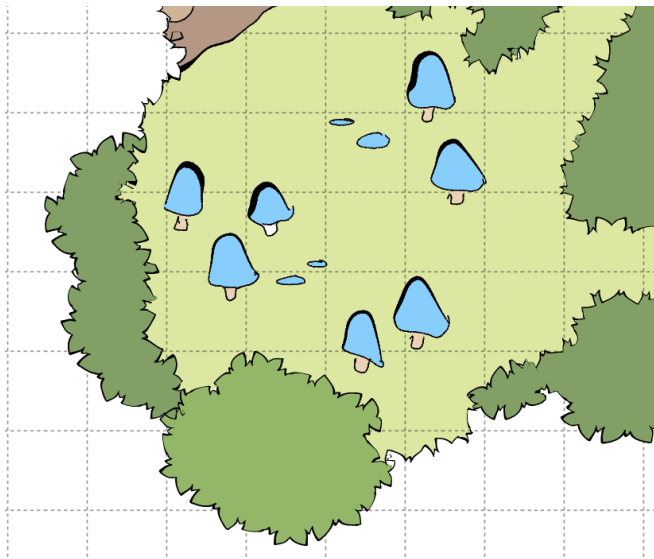

The players begin in the north-western room. It is separated from the room below by a sharp cliff. String Shot residue suggests that Caterpie used it to climb down, but there's far from enough for the party to form a rope in order to rappel themselves. An oran berry and 64 poké can be found on the floor.

Climbing down the ledge requires an Athletics roll, or another technique to safely descend. On a failure, the affected pokémon takes 3 points of typeless and unguarded damage from their fall.

Flying types and those with the Levitate ability are considered immune, and can safely descend, but must make an Athletics check to carry allies down at risk of dropping them. Craft can be used to form ropes from nearby vines, Perception can be used to look for footholds, or the party can use moves in order to reach the next room.

RISK: If the Guild Master is feeling particularly devious, have small flying or bug-type enemies attack the party while they scale the drop. Force players to balance safely descending and dealing with foes trying to sever their ropes or knock them from their footholds.

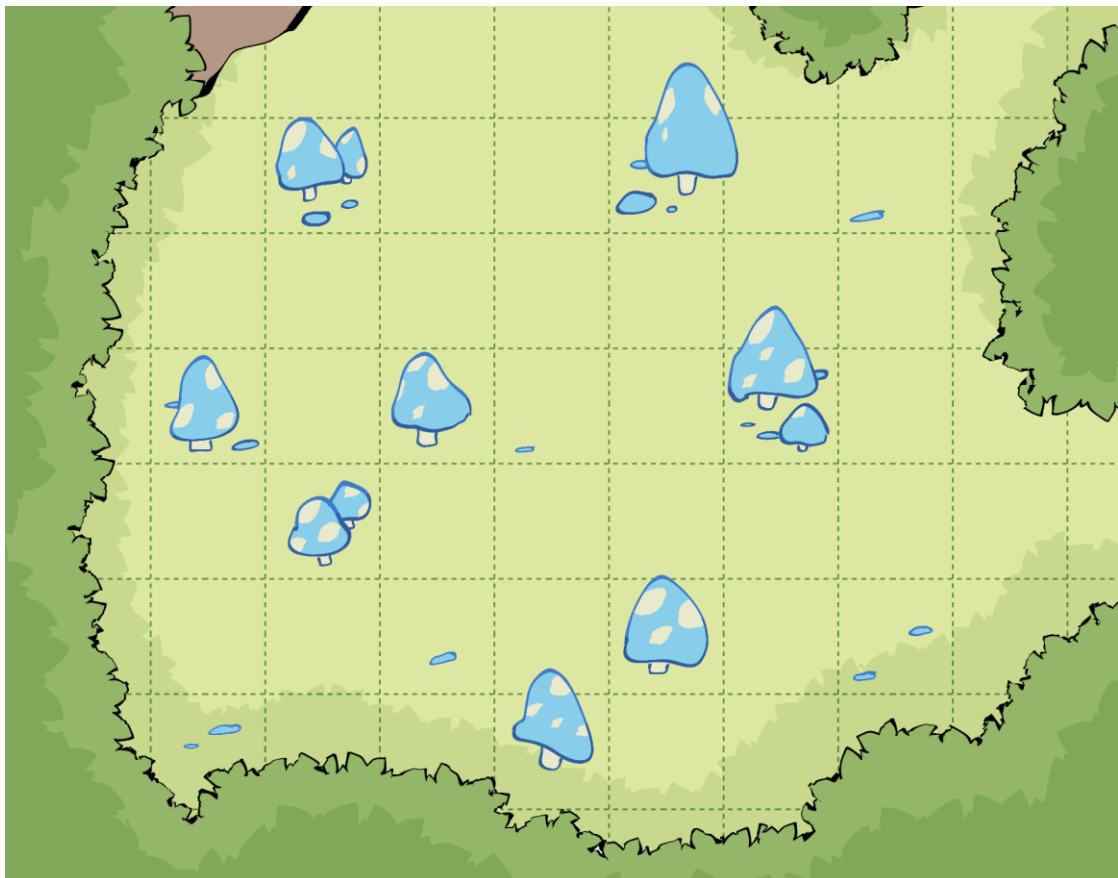

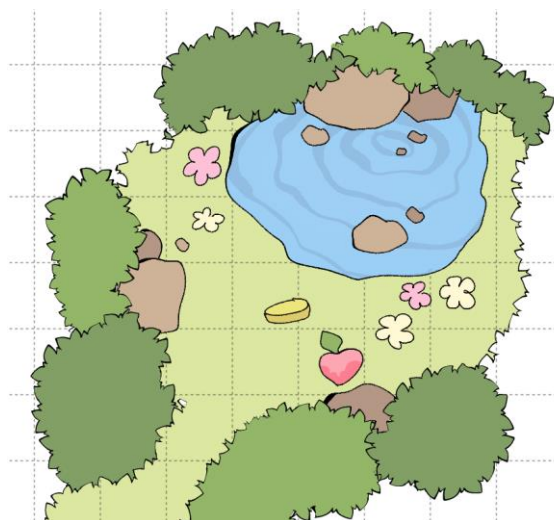

At the bottom of the cliff is a clearing. The floor is covered in luminous blue mushrooms that cast an unnatural glow over their ferny surroundings.

The mushrooms are motion-sensitive. If a pokémon in this room moves faster than a crawl, they belch poisonous spores. The affected pokémon must pass an Endurance roll or take 3 points of poison-type damage, and become poisoned if in combat.

Also in this room is a small gaggle of enemies. Since this battle has an additional gimmick, the Guild Master may want to present the party with fewer enemies to avoid overwhelming them. In this combat encounter, the mushrooms' effect activates if any pokémon – or object – moves further than one space in their turn.

The mushrooms can be cut down to prevent them from billowing their toxins. If burnt, they produce a 15-foot cloud of toxic gas that deals 6 poison damage to all in range, and badly poisoning the victim in combat. If harvested, they can be used to synthesize both poisonous potions and antidotes.

In the northern room, the party finds a pool of water, 79 poké, a pecha berry, and several small, sweet-tasting flowers. The flowers do not fill the belly, but enhance food they're added to, making them fill 5 more points.

The pool heals any pokémon who steps into it, once per day per pokémon. Upon feeling its healing effect, the pokémon also sees a brief vision of a happy memory from the last pokémon to step into the pool.

The first party member to enter the pool will see a memory of Caterpie's. Read or paraphrase the following:

As the water washes over you, the sparkles on the surface begin to dance, filling your mind with visions: suddenly, you're far away from the dungeon, standing in a sunlit kitchen while your mama bakes, the light glowing through her wings like the stained glass of a temple.

You've been running errands with her all day, since you're big enough to help out, but then she slides the apple pie into the oven and asks you to set the timer on the counter, and in that warm smile and gentle tone you find yourself feeling small again, as if you only hatched yesterday.

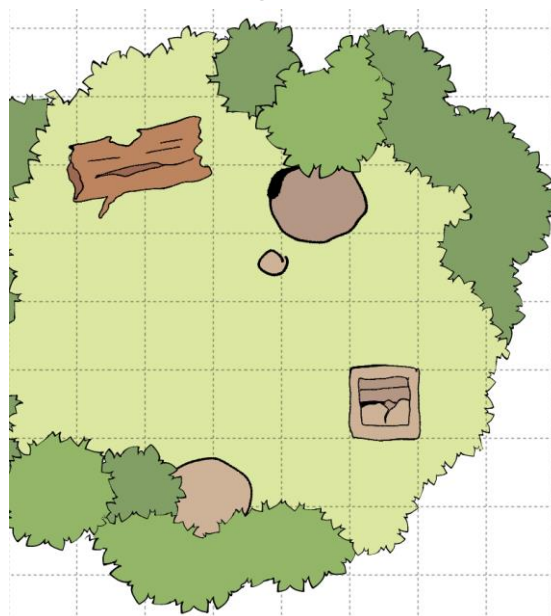

One day you'll evolve into a metapod, and you'll be tougher and braver and you can protect your mama from anything. For now, though, you're her special little boy, and you're okay with it staying that way for a while.

When another party member steps into the pool, the previous party member should describe one of their happy memories. If they have amnesia, the Guild Master may describe the foggy details of a memory mostly forgotten.

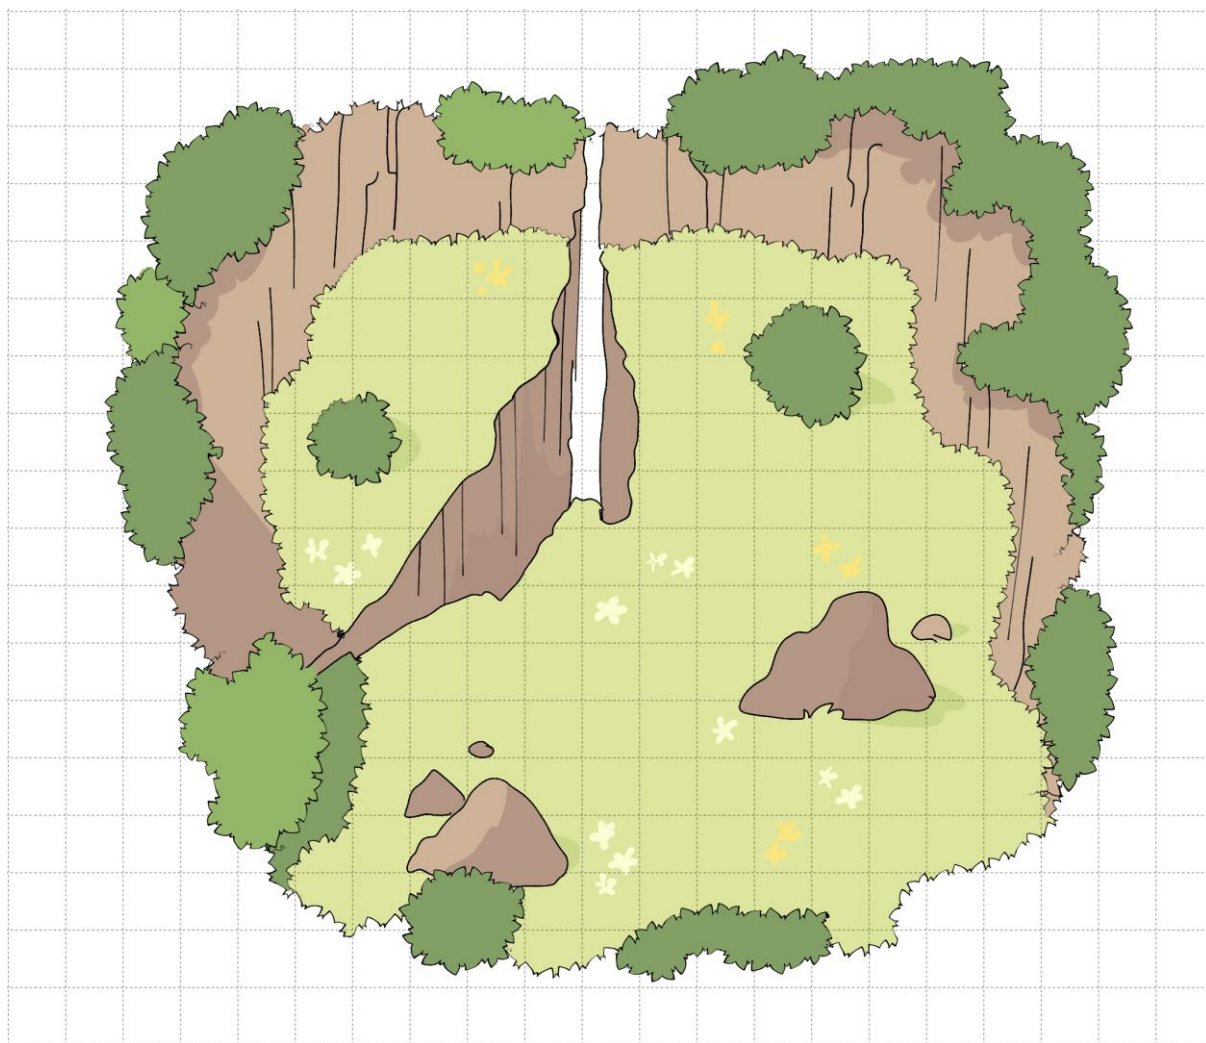

In the south-eastern room are stairs and a combat encounter. The Guild Master should select the appropriate number of foes for the party from the Enemy Stats page.

At the end of the first round, two additional enemies emerge from inside the fallen log.

The stairs are partially blocked by rubble, and the party should use items, teamwork, moves or skills to clear the path.

FLOOR 4: CATCHING UP TO CATERPIE

Descending the stairs, the group enters a large open space. Caterpie can be heard crying out in fear, stuck in the north-western part of the room, separated from the party by a canyon.

As they approach, the party is interrupted by a piercing shriek, and a frenzied pidgeotto attacks! Two equally aggressive pidgey fly to its aid and begin their assault.

The frantic flap of the pidgeotto's wings causes a strong wind that pushes the party around. The wind's direction changes each round based on the roll of a d4.

1 = North | 2 = East | 3 = South | 4 = West

Pokémon will have their move distance halved when moving against the wind, and multiplied by 1.5x when moving with the wind. Projectiles such as rocks will have their damage reduced by 2 when thrown against the wind, and increased by 2 when thrown in the direction that the wind is blowing. Flying-type moves deal an additional 2 damage on a hit while the wind is active.

At the end of their turn, a combatant must be somehow secured (such as standing behind a sturdy rock or tying themselves off to a tree), or make an Endurance or Athletics check to avoid being pushed by the wind. On a fail, they are moved $1d2+1$ spaces in the direction of the wind.

A creature that is pushed down the canyon must make an Athletics check, or use an item or move, to avoid falling and being badly hurt. On a success, they manage to cling to the edge, but must use their next turn to climb back up and rejoin the fight.

Pidgeotto and the pidgeys cannot be reasoned with, and are in a state of primal aggression induced by the dungeon's sudden appearance.

The pidgey will disperse if pidgeotto is defeated. Alternatively, if the player characters are fast enough, they may attempt to flee – if pidgeotto is below 25% of its maximum health, it will not follow the group past the first floor, or into the canyon if the party has a safe method of descending.

Caterpie will attempt to assist the party beginning on the start of the third round. Though the ways he can help is limited, he will attempt to slow the flying enemies with string shot.

When the pidgeotto is defeated, the dungeon seems to return to a state of calm, and the players can leave with relative ease. If the party chooses to flee into the canyon, they must make Survival checks to navigate the caves beneath the dungeon and return to the surface. In any case, should the party be successful, they will leave Tiny Woods with Caterpie in tow, rattled but otherwise safe.

ENDING THE ADVENTURE

Leaving the dungeon, the party is greeted by Butterfree, who scoops her darling son into her arms and spins him around in a tight hug. She thanks the heroes profusely, and they are given the reward agreed upon at the beginning of the adventure.

If the party was especially devoted and did not initially haggle for a higher reward, she may offer additional poké or items as thanks. If they were very kind or cool to Caterpie, he will give them each 10 poké from his pocket money.

The group is invited to stay at Butterfree's house, and will be treated to a meal if they accept. If not, they will be given a basket of fresh bread the following morning. As with the original games, Caterpie swears by his desire to become an adventurer like the party when he grows up.

The Guild Master may choose how to end the adventure – if no party member suggests becoming a formal exploration team, they may be approached by a member of the Pokémon Rescue Organisation, a recruiting agent for a nearby guild, or an interested townspokémon suggesting that they form or join a team. Characters' backstories or desires may be used as hooks to draw them in.

Otherwise, if the party chooses to go their separate ways, allow it, and give each character a short parting narration describing what they get up to in the aftermath of the adventure. Hint towards other dungeons appearing in the surrounding area, leaving the story open to further developments.

The sun sets on Tiny Woods, and the pokémon of the village go to rest in their beds. Caterpie is home safe and sound, dreams of his rescuers illuminating his rest like comets in the night sky. As sleep drapes itself like a blanket the land, the murmur of nightfall is interrupted by the faraway rumble of the earth shifting and cracking open, the winds beginning to howl, and the frenzied bellows of distant pokémon.

The End

INDEX: TREASURE AND FORAGE

As aforementioned, characters may search rooms for items, and may forage once per room. Items may also be dropped by defeated or fleeing foes. Roll 1d20 and award the treasure-hunting party member with the appropriate loot.

d20	Items	Treasure	Forage
1	Oran Berry	Chlorocape. The wearer heals 1 HP per turn/20 minutes in bright sunlight.	Big Root
2	Cheri Berry		1d4 edible roots
3	Small Apple		1d4 edible fungi
4	2d12 Sticks		Oran Berry
5	Pecha Berry	Cater-Belt. Caterpie, Metapod and Butterfree restore +10% fullness from eating food items.	Sweet chestnuts
6	Heal Seed		Wild plums
7	Persim Band		Pecha Berry
8	Apple		1d4 tea flowers
9	Escape Orb	Hero's Acorn. When planted and watered, it will instantly grow into a mighty 40-foot oak.	Honey
10	Quick Seed		Honeycomb
11	Tiny Reviver Seed		1d4 Small Apples
12	3d12 Poké		1d6 thick vines
13	Warp Seed	Willow Harp. Once a day, it heals all grass-types in a 10ft radius for 3d4 HP and causes flowers to bloom.	1d6 rare herbs
14	Elixir		1d4 poisonous darts
15	Evasion Orb		1d6 poisonous flowers
16	Max Elixir		1d6 poisonous fungi
17	Warp Wand (1d6 charges)	Smoliv Crown. Grants a +10% bonus to Persuasion checks if worn by Smoliv, Dolliv or Arboliva.	1d10+2 wild violets
18	Slow Orb		1d4 wild sweet potatoes
19	TM Bullet Seed		Molted ariados pelt
20	3d6x10 Poké		Mixed wildflower seeds

Tarountula's Shop

Scarf of Daniel

A lookalike item to the Scarf of Denial, which grants temporary immunity to fairy-type attacks.

The Scarf of Daniel creates an illusion that disguises the wearer as an adult male heliolisk named Daniel.

Small Apple – 20 poké

Oran Berry – 75 poké

Pecha Berry – 50 poké

Rope (50ft) – 20 poké

5 Iron Thorns – 15 poké

Pole (10ft) – 5 poké

Playing Cards – 10 poké

Scarf of ~~Denial~~ Daniel – 50 poké

INDEX: ENEMY STATS

Pidgey HP: 40 ATK: 2 DEF: 1 SPAtk: 1 SPDef: 1 SPD: 6 Keen Eye Tackle – 4 (+2) Normal Physical 100% 35 PP Sand Attack – Lowers accuracy Ground Status 100% 15 PP Gust – 4 (+1) Flying Special 100% 35 PP Quick Attack – 4 (+2) Normal Physical 100% 30 PP Range of 2 spaces	Sunkern HP: 30 ATK: 1 DEF: 1 SPAtk: 1 SPDef: 1 SPD: 3 Chlorophyll Tackle – 4 (+1) Normal Physical 100% 40 PP Growth – Raises SPAtk by 1 stage Normal Status 20 PP Absorb – 2 (+1) Grass Special 100% 25 PP Heals user for 50% of damage dealt Ingrain – Heals 10% of max HP per turn, prevents movement Grass Status 20 PP
Nymble HP: 33 ATK: 2 DEF: 1 SPAtk: 1 SPDef: 1 SPD: 5 Swarm Tackle – 4 (+2) Normal Physical 100% 35 PP Leer – Lowers target DEF by 1 stage Normal Status 100% 30 PP Struggle Bug – 5 (+1) Bug Special 100% 20 PP Lowers target SPAtk by 1 stage Astonish – 3 (+2) Ghost Physical 100% 15 PP 30% chance to flinch on hit	Exeggcute HP: 60 ATK: 1 DEF: 3 SPAtk: 2 SPDef: 2 SPD: 4 Chlorophyll Absorb – 2 (+2) Grass Special 100% 25 PP Heals user for 50% of damage dealt Hypnosis – Inflicts sleep Psychic Status 60% 20 PP Reflect – Halves incoming physical damage for 5 turns Psychic Status 20 PP
Paras HP: 35 ATK: 3 DEF: 2 SPAtk: 2 SPDef: 2 SPD: 3 Effect Spore Scratch – 4 (+1) Normal Physical 100% 35 PP Stun Spore – Paralyzes foe Grass Status 75% 30 PP Poison Powder – Poisons foe Poison Status 75% 35 PP Absorb – 2 (+2) Grass Special 100% 25 PP Heals user for 50% of damage dealt	Pachirisu HP: 60 ATK: 2 DEF: 3 SPAtk: 2 SPDef: 4 SPD: 10 Run Away Growl – Lowers target ATK by 1 stage Normal Status 100% 40 PP Thunder Shock – 4 (+2) Electric Special 100% 30 PP 10% chance to paralyze Quick Attack – 4 (+2) Normal Physical 100% 30 PP Range of 2 spaces Charge – Next electric type attack deals +2 damage Electric Status 20 PP
Fletchling HP: 45 ATK: 2 DEF: 1 SPAtk: 1 SPDef: 1 SPD: 6 Big Pecks Peck – 4 (+2) Flying Physical 100% 35 PP Growl – Lowers target ATK by 1 stage Normal Status 100% 40 PP Quick Attack – 4 (+2) Normal Physical 100% 30 PP Range of 2 spaces Ember – 4 (+1) Fire Special 100% 25 PP	Pidgeotto ★ HP: 70 ATK: 3 DEF: 3 SPAtk: 3 SPDef: 4 SPD: 7 Keen Eye Gust – 4 (+3) Flying Special 100% 35 PP Quick Attack – 4 (+3) Normal Physical 100% 30 PP Range of 2 spaces Twister – 4 (+3) Dragon Physical 100% 20 PP Whirlwind – Throws target 1d6 spaces Flying Status Ath. check to resist 20 PP

Other suggested foes: tarountula, zigzagoon, mankey, shroomish, ekans, spinarak.
Guild Masters may want to gently nerf pachirisu for fairness.

INDEX: USELESS INFORMATION TABLE

Adventurers may roll to learn things about their surroundings, get hints on puzzles, gain an advantage against foes and discern the truthfulness of others' words. However, on a failed roll, or if there's nothing to find, they may come up with information that's... less than useful.

The information should be presented in a dire and serious tone, as if it were just as pertinent as information found on a successful check. If a piece of information comes up more than once, the Guild Master can choose to either choose another piece of information.

d6	d4	Information
1	1	The sky is often blue, except for when it is not.
	2	Drinking water can be very hazardous, depending on what is in the water at the time. If a feraligatr is in the water, this can be deadly.
	3	3% of all curse words in the pokémon language came from tinkaton.
	4	If a sharpedo is eating you, punching it in the nose will cause it to start eating you slightly faster.
2	1	Wearing the belt can cause significant injury if done incorrectly.
	2	You are not currently suffering from exposure to the wizard.
	3	Somewhere, currently, there is a quagsire.
	4	Acting natural will grant you a few precious extra seconds.
3	1	Pokémon living on the Grass Continent cannot be buried in cemeteries located on the Sand Continent, as they have not died yet.
	2	In the right amounts, a mixture of Sleep Powder, Poison Powder and Stun Spore dust can be used to create a flavourful seasoning.
	3	Male beedrill buzz in the key of G.
	4	The weakest bisharp ever recorded was named Sneek.
4	1	You can shave a piloswine, but they might not like it.
	2	A typhlosion can hard-boil an egg by thinking about it very hard.
	3	If attacked, an ursaring will often attack.
	4	Escape orbs are often found.
5	1	Existing in the same room as a machop can burn up to 400 calories in one hour, roughly equivalent to running four miles.
	2	An old rumour says that the fur on the back of a stoutland is not flammable, but it's best not to try it out.
	3	Of all dragon types, druddigon have the densest bones.
	4	Only 75% of water types are... 'wet'.
6	1	On the Wind Continent, it is illegal to create an automaton with the sole purpose of combat. As such, many fighting machines on the continent also function as common home appliances.
	2	If you hold a spinarak to your ear, you can hear what it sounds like to be attacked by a spinarak.
	3	By definition, an ekans' entire body is a limb.
	4	If you're burned and don't have a rawst berry, applying wild ginger or garlic to the burn will immediately make the pain worse.